Washington Attorney Explains Relations With Wife of New York Banker.

George Chandlee, well-known patent attorney with offices at 404 Seventh street, upon his return from New York today, revealed a chapter in his life of association with Mabel Kane, the woman who is being sued by her husband. August Tiemeyer, banker, for annulment of their marriage,

"It was purely through altruistic motives that I went to New York at my own expense to testify against the woman and for her husband," he

Seeks Annulment. The annulment proceedings allege that Mrs. Tiemeyer wooed and wed the banker, pretending that she was the divorced wife of Chandlee. Discovery that she had never been wedded to Chandlee led to the action now being taken against the former Georgetown woman.

In her own defense, Mrs. Tiemeyer asserted she revealed to her husband circumstances of her association with the Washington patent attorney, de-nying that she had deceived him into believing that she had been divorced from Chandlee.
She said her father had died of a broken heart, while her grandfather disinherited her, when learning of her relations with the patent attorney.

The trial has been adjourned till

Monday, in order that the will disinheriting Mrs. Tiemeyer might be produced in evidence. "Reglizing that Tiemeyer was to take action against Mabel, I offered to aid him," said Chandlee. "She had tried to get me to help her out of the 'scrape.' by urging that I admit we had been divorced. But I refused. and when her husband came to me I told the truth-I told him I would willingly testify in his behalf. "I wanted to keep the man' out of hole,' so I volunteered to bare before the public my association with Denies Her Story. "Mabel never met me at a dinner party on the anniversary of Washington's birthday. She met me when she answered ar, advertisement for a po-sition as stenographer in my office.

"True, we dined together; went to the theaters, and were frequently to-gether—but our association was merely of a social nature. But she became overzealous in my affairsshe began to worry me with her characteristic nerve. She had moments of anger and fits of violence. Then she left my office.

"Later she had some trouble about a ring she had giver me to borrow money on. I pawned the ring, and later she sold it, declaring that she had lost the ticket, although she knew I had the ticket.
"On another occasion, when she was ill and had to undergo an operation, she made an affidavit that I had agreed to pay for it. I had agreed to pay for the operation at a set price But she made arrangements, and the operation cost more than I told her I was willing to pay. Her affidavit claimed I said I was willing to pay anything for the operation. Lawyer Refutes Chandlee.

Mrs. Tiemeyer's lawyer denies that mail-that he only compromised to payment of $6,000, in monthly in stalments of $100 after he threatened with prosecution.

The woman denies emphatically that she had hid her past to her husband, claiming that she bared ner relations with Chandlee prior to her marriage to the New York banker. Resumption of the trial will start on Monday before Justice Pendleton
